- High pressure will be over Northern California through Saturday.
- Most areas will be dry with above normal temperatures. The exception will be late Friday when a low pressure trough moving through the Pacific NW brings spotty light rain to far NW CA.
- N-NE/Offshore winds will gust to 15-25 mph in a few wind-prone areas from the western Cascade-Sierra crest to the coast during nights and mornings through Saturday.
- A low pressure trough will move through the region Sunday and exit early Monday. Light rain possible north of a Ukiah-McCloud-Alturas line, with up to half an inch in far NW CA. Partly cloudy to cloudy elsewhere.
- All areas will see cooler temperatures, higher relative humidity (RH), and gusty S-W winds Sunday. Gusts from the Shasta Valley E will reach 25-35 mph late Sunday.
- High pressure will return with warm, dry, and breezy conditions Monday-Friday.
- N-NE/Offshore winds 10-20 mph with gusts to 30-40 mph from the Western Cascade-Sierra slopes to the coast Monday-Tuesday, then continuing at lighter speeds. Daily minimum RH 10-20% beginning Monday. Poor RH recovery also beginning Monday.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

- Much warmer weather can be expected through Saturday as strong high pressure parks itself over the district. Very light and highly localized offshore winds will be possible Friday and Saturday during the morning hours across Southern California. Much cooler weather will return Monday, with gusty north winds likely through the favored canyons. A stronger offshore wind event looms ahead next Tuesday evening into Halloween.
- Mostly sunny skies with high temperatures in the 60s in the mountains to the upper 80s and lower 90s in the valleys through Saturday. Temperatures falling 8-12 degrees Monday.
